What is Neocollagenesis?

Facial Neocollagenesis, or collagen induction therapy, is a unique process that plumps up the skin's natural collagen in depressed areas, reducing unwanted facial wrinkles, removing acne scars, softening crow's feet, and reducing wrinkles in the peri-orbital and naso-labial regions. This cosmetic treatment improves skin elasticity, indentations, and scars. When performed by a professional, neocollagenesis is more effective as the needle can target individual wrinkle crevices, acne scars, and skin indentation. Neocollagenesis is a safe and effective way to stimulate the body's natural collagen production, and is gaining popularity over synthetic collagen treatment.

Benefits of Attending

This class offers safe, quick, and easy Scar Relaxation, Melanocyte Restoration, and Neocollagenesis procedures to boost income and expand clientele. These treatments are easy to perform and provide minimal downtime for clients. A 30-minute session is sufficient for a single treatment, with best results achieved 4-6 weeks apart. The cost varies between $150 and $600, depending on location.

Melanocyte Restoration

Melanocyte Restoration stimulates melanocyte cells in the epidermis to regenerate melanin production in white spots, age spots, and hypopigmented areas.

With a 90% success rate, it involves inserting a needle grouping into the epidermal layer, signaling the brain to send melanin to re-pigment areas lacking color.

Results range from pink to brown, depending on the number of applications received.

Scar Relaxation

Scar Relaxation involves releasing fibrous collagen bands in contracted tissue, resulting in softened, smoothed, and flattened scars. This procedure involves inserting a sterile needle into the dermal layer, signaling the brain to break down the fibrous bands. Results range from softening the scar's texture to increased range of motion, with clients regaining total range of motion depending on the number of applications and contracture severity.
